I was trying to define a structure to hold the database logic of my applications, but I started to wonder if it would be better to place this all in the App.xaml.cs file. Is this a good idea? I don't want to have anything in there that shouldn't be there. By the way, I'm new to Windows Store apps. Please, correct me if I'm wrong. Thanks A: If you haven't used Entity Framework it would be a good idea to use it to fetch the data when the app starts, store it, and then use it whenever you need to. If you use it as a Sqlite DB then you have the advantage to add ADO.NET, Entity Framework, Entity Data and the like. It will make all your code better structured and more maintainable as well.
